The two websites have distinct designs and approaches. Here's a comparison:

BAD WEBSITE ;

Design Style

- Dark, premium, and rugged
- Black background with red & gold highlights
- Bold typography showing heritage and power
- Minimal layout with strong visual focus

Content

- Brand name: Royal Enfield
- Title: Showcase
- Tagline: "Feel the torque, hear the roar."
- Bike models: Classic 350, GT 650, Himalayan 450
- Legacy badge: Since 1901

Navigation

- Simple and minimal
- Focus on bike models
- Can include options like Home, Motorcycles, Contact

Purpose

- Highlight key motorcycles
- Build brand emotion and trust
- Attract users to explore or take action

GOOD WEBSITE;
Design Style

- Bold and premium layout

- Dark stage-style background & clean white sections
- Red headers highlight model names
- Product-focused with clear visuals and specs

Content

- Bike models:
    - RE Continental GT 650
    - RE Classic 350
    - RE Himalayan 450
- Key details shown:
    - Top speed
    - Mileage
    - Price
    - Engine capacity
- High-quality bike images with thumbnails

- Left & right arrow buttons for sliding bikes
- Thumbnail selector for quick model switch
- Simple vertical scrolling between models

Purpose

- Compare Royal Enfield bikes easily
- Showcase specs in a visual way
- Help users choose the right model
- Suitable for showroom, website, or UI project

Key Differences:

- Focus:
  The first design focuses on clear bike details and comparison, while the second focuses on emotional appeal and brand storytelling.
- Design Aesthetics:
  The first is clean, bright, and minimal; the second is dark, dramatic, and visually rich.

- Content Depth:
  The first shows basic specifications for quick understanding, whereas the second highlights features in a more promotional way.
- User Experience:
  The first is easy to scan and practical; the second feels immersive and showroom-like.
- Target Audience:
